Using RT-PCR and in situ hybridisation, we have analysed the temporal and spatial expression patterns of Xenopus Fox genes of subclass N. By screening cDNA libraries and by RT-PCR using embryonic RNA and primers derived from EST analyses, we could isolate FoxN2, FoxN4, FoxN5 and different isoforms of FoxN3.

Temporal pattern processing is important for various intelligent behaviors, including hearing, vision, speech, music and motor control. ... The delay line STM transforms a temporal pattern into a spatial one where time forms another dimension. This idea forms the basis of many recognition models (e.g. Waibel et al., 1989).

Spatiotemporal patterns are patterns that occur in a wide range of natural phenomena and are characterized by a spatial and a temporal patterning. The general rules of pattern formation hold. In contrast to "static", pure spatial patterns, the full complexity of spatiotemporal patterns can only be recognized over time. Any kind of traveling wave is a good example of a spatiotemporal pattern.
